Bio:

Andreas Stavrinides studied Sociology, Art History & Cinematography before turns into Fashion & Beauty Photography.

Andreas Stavrinides is a photographer and director of photography working across fashion, editorial, film and commercial projects.

His work has been published internationally, including printed editorials for Italian Vogue, and spans Hollywod feature films and series series, and high-end commercial productions. His visual language blends cinematic storytelling with a strong editorial sensibility, shaped by years of experience across both stills and motion.

He is currently based among London and Athens, working internationally, and collaborating with brands, publications, production companies and creative teams worldwide.

Franca Sozzani as Editor in Chief in Italian Vogue, choosed Andreas not only for his aesthetic, architecture and cinematic style that he see things, but to creating the beauty trends for the upcoming seasons globally, trusted him and gave him the freedom, to develop originals visual directions and colour language that went on to influence the seasonal aesthetic, and adopted across the cosmetic and beauty industry worldwide.

She always hand-picked very few artists that works with her, and Andreas was the the first Greek photographer untill these days that works with Italian Vogue.

He is not using photosphop to creating his images in mirrors or any other form, what he captures is actually what you see.

His focus remains on high-end fashion, commercial and narrative-driven projects, bringing a refined, cinematic approach to fashion campaigns, branded content and film work.

Available worldwide for commissions.
